Department of Defense Money Makes Its Way to Kick start R & D.

The Department of Defense (DoD) announced on March 6th that they awarded $52.5 million to support the purchase of research equipment. These awards range from $50,000 to $1 million.

This money is designed to purchase equipment and develop new capabilities to perform cutting edge defense research. This includes research related to information technology, remote sensing, propulsion, electronics and electro-optics, advanced materials, and ocean science and engineering. The DoD research offices collectively received more than 700 proposals requesting $224 million in equipment support. Of that, 107 select institutions were chosen to receive the awards.
